Wood Finishing

Jim Dupler discussed several available wood finishes and techniques. Mineral oil and beeswax are both long used, food safe finishes that can be combined or used individually. Dewaxed shellac makes a good sealer that can be over coated or used as a topcoat. Pure tung oil are natural finishes that need several coats to provide the best sheen. Linseed oil will bring out the grain in cherry. Varnish is another popular finish which is handy to use in rattle cans. Several HVLP systems are available for applying different finishes. Are they practical for small projects is a question one has to answer for their self. Liberon steel wool is considered superior based on an opinion that it contains less oil than competitors. Renaissance wax, a wax developed for use with antique restoration is popular with Jim. Carnuba wax is another popular wax which provide a tough shine. To attain a quality buff one should consider the Beall buffing system.
